

Clark Energy Lines

A publication of Clark Energy Cooperative, Inc., proudly serving our members since 1938.

Take me home, please . . .

Dave Stamper bonds with Bo Sefus at the Clark County Animal Shelter. Dave and wife Patty ended up adopting the two-year-old boxer, which was brought in as a stray. Shelter director Beth Bowman said everyone who wants a dog or cat should first consider the shelter, which has many excellent, well-trained animals available for adoption.

What's Inside

FEBRUARY 2012

PAGE B

Healthy Savings benefits added to Co-op Connections Card

PAGE C

Co-op Connections Card became a "lifesaver"

PAGE D

Animal Shelter offers variety of fine pets

PAGE F

A Time to Live: Volunteers work to save shelter animals

PAGE G

Stay safe and warm in ice storms

PAGE H

Youth Tour

Editor: Lois Hatton

www.clarkenergy.com

Animal shelter offers variety of fine pets

Story and photos by Shanda Crosby

The instant Bo Sefus was led from his cage in the Clark County Animal Shelter kennel, he seemed to know it was his lucky day. The spirited boxer immediately approached his potential owners and showed them the personality that made him stand out at the shelter.

It didn't take Dave and Patty Stamper long to fall for the playful pooch. "He's a sweetheart," said shelter director Beth Bowman, "a really good dog."

That description fits a large number of the dogs available for adoption, contrary to common belief. "Many shelters, not just ours, have a lot of good, well-trained dogs and cats," Bowman said. "People have a perception that animals at the shelter are just throw-aways and not worth adoption. But we have so many well-tempered, well-behaved animals here."

Consider Bo Sefus, for example, who is now part of the Stamper family. The approximately two-year-old boxer was brought to the shelter as a stray a few weeks earlier. For $70, including neutering, shots, and initial vet checks, the Stampers have a healthy, pure-bred boxer. And even better, the couple saved a dog's life.

Labor of love . . . Beth Bowman, shelter director for seven years, loves every animal as her own, and works hard to find a home for each.

Bowman checks the kennel in the shelter's brand new building a few weeks before the animals moved to their new home.

While Bo Sefus's result is ideal, it isn't always the case. In 2011, the shelter's animal numbers were up, while adoptions were down. "We had the most animals brought in to us in 2011 than we have had since I have been here," Bowman said, "and we also had the fewest amount of adoptions."

Since she took over as shelter director seven years ago, Bowman has worked diligently to reduce the number of animals that must be euthanized by coordinating with area rescue agencies,

Kentucky Living F Month 2008

Work at the shelter is never done with animals constantly being dropped off by individuals or brought in by the dog warden.

be able to fairly assess them so I can properly match them with an owner. Our goal and hope is to find each of them a home as quickly as possible."

Though the shelter operates on a minimal budget and could use monetary and other donations such as food and blankets, Bowman said the greatest need is clear: "We need more adoptions," she said.

The shelter offers all sizes and breeds of dogs and cats, from full-bred to mixed, but regardless of their bloodline, they all have received love and good care while they wait for a home. But don't ask Bowman how many animals the shelter has. She doesn't ever count them. "If I counted," she said, "I would get overwhelmed."

Managed by the Clark County Fiscal Court, the Animal Shelter depends on individual and business donations to survive. The shelter gladly accepts monetary gifts, food, cleaning supplies, toys, treats, and old blankets. As soon as Bowman was named director in 2005, she began fundraising for a new shelter building, which opened early this year.

Work at the shelter is never done with animals constantly being dropped off by individuals or brought in by the dog warden, who works directly with Bowman. Often, visitors to the office will be greeted by at least one of the animals. "We bring the animals into the office one by one to get to know them," Bowman said. "We don't want a laid back person to adopt the most energetic dog, and we don't want someone who wants a playful dog to get one that prefers to lie around. We want to match the right dog with the right owner."

The average adoption time for an animal is a month to six weeks, but for Bo Sefus, the wait was a little more than two weeks.

"It is my hope that people who want a pet will consider adoption through a shelter," Bowman said. "Why pay $500 for a dog when you can get one here for $70, including shots and spay/neutering. And besides that, you are saving an animal's life."

The Clark County Animal Shelter is open to the public Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and is located off Route 15 at the Clark County Fairgrounds. For more information on the shelter or how to donate, email clarkanimal@bellsouth.net, or call the shelter at (859) 737-0053.

and establishing a vibrant web presence through www.petfinder.com.

Nearly 500 animals were saved in 2011 through the efforts of A Time to Live (see related story), a local rescue and transport organization. "Not every animal can be saved," Bowman said. "We can hold only so many, so we have to make decisions based on health, temperament, and age. I still don't sleep the night before and I still cry. I'm not ashamed to admit it."

Bowman's love for animals began when she was young and she carries her passion into her job every day. "It's important to develop a relationship with all the pets," she said. "I have to

A Time to Live: Volunteers work to save shelter animals

By Shanda Crosby

Being a voice for those who don't have one.

This is the mission of A Time to Live, an animal rescue/transport organization that works closely with the Clark County Animal Shelter to find homes for abandoned cats and dogs.

The voice has been loud and strong. After forming in January 2011, the organization's efforts saved 486 shelter animals through December. Seventy transports of 56,000 miles were made to non-kill rescues in three northeastern states where strict spay and neuter laws result in fewer animals available for adoption.

A Time to Live won the Pepsi Refresh Challenge in 2011, allowing the group to purchase a new transport van for moving animals to non-kill shelters in the northeast. Because of the group's efforts, 486 animals were saved in 2011. Presenting the key is Ronnie Price from Mann Chevrolet in Campton. Present are A Time to Live board members Beth Bowman, Dee Fletcher, Kim Moore, and Tammy Moberly. Photo submitted.

Two Clark Energy employees – Tammy Moberly and Kim Moore – serve on the board of A Time to Live, which formed from the longtime work of a core group of people who have spent years giving their time in various capacities to support the Clark County Animal Shelter.

"It's so rewarding to be able to work with shelter employees and rescue groups to see animals have a second chance at a forever home and finding that perfect family to love them unconditionally just as the animals give unconditional love," Moore said.

Besides rescues, A Time to Live sponsors off-site adoption events and coordinates other efforts to raise public awareness.

"Everything we do is to improve the quality of life for the CCAS animals and to give as many as possible a second chance for happiness in a loving forever home," Moberly said.

A Time to Live won the Pepsi Refresh Challenge in 2011, allowing the group to purchase a new transport van. The group plans regular fundraising events to help with expenses, and needs more volunteers who share a passion for saving abandoned animals.

"Several of us are wearing many hats so we really need additional volunteers to more efficiently get everything completed," Moberly said. "Our volunteers work daily to save the lives of our shelter animals. Despite our continuing efforts we unfortunately are not able to save them all, but that will not discourage us from continuing to try. The support of our community is key to our success."

A Time to Live appreciates tax deductible donations, which help cover transport and operation expenses. Additional information may be found on the group's web-site at <http://www.atimetolive.net> and on its joint Facebook page under Clark County Animal Shelter.